IV. REFLECTION

IV. Reflection

4.1 Practicum Learning

During my practicum, I gained valuable hands-on experience in analyzing, checking, and consulting calculated paper records. I learned how to properly review documents, verify computations, and ensure data accuracy by comparing manual and digital records. These tasks enhanced my analytical skills and taught me how to identify and correct discrepancies effectively. I also became more familiar with office tools and systems used in managing and organizing information.

In addition, I developed essential workplace skills such as organization, patience, and adaptability. I learned how to follow instructions carefully, meet deadlines, and maintain proper documentation. The experience strengthened my understanding of how structured processes contribute to efficient operations and reliable outputs in a professional environment.

4.2 Problems Encountered

One of the challenges I encountered during my practicum was dealing with large volumes of paper records, which sometimes made it difficult to maintain organization and track information efficiently. There were moments when I experienced confusion while checking complex computations, especially when data entries were unclear or incomplete. This required extra time and effort to verify details and ensure accuracy.

Another difficulty was adjusting to the workflow and expectations of the office environment. At times, I needed to manage multiple tasks simultaneously, which tested my time management skills. Additionally, minor distractions and fatigue affected my concentration, especially during repetitive tasks that required high attention to detail.

4.3 Suggestions and Recommendations

To improve the practicum experience, it is recommended to implement more organized systems for managing paper records, such as proper labeling or partial digitization to reduce manual workload. Providing clear guidelines and sample references for tasks like data checking and analysis can also help interns perform their duties more efficiently and with greater confidence.

It is also suggested to incorporate regular feedback sessions between supervisors and interns to address concerns and improve performance. Time management strategies and short breaks can help maintain focus and productivity, especially when handling repetitive tasks. Overall, these improvements can enhance learning outcomes and make the practicum experience more effective and engaging.
